The ante-mortem obituary on Mrs Ledru Guthrie, who was reported dying in Chicago, darn't fit. The information which it contained was sent by an Okia-homa gentleman of veracity who, doubt-iess, was imposed upon. To the editor of the Eagle Mrs. Guthris writes concerning the matter, having seen it in the EAGLE in Virginia. The EAGLE has a wide carcula-tion and a wonderful influence in Virginia for a R-publican paper and it is but right and just that Mrs. Guthrie's statement should be published. She says:

A QUEER CHRISTENING.

The Godparents Make Their Responses in Hunting Costume. An "up-to-date christening," which was recently held at an English country house in a sporting county, is described by an American girl in one of her home

"Milly is up and has taken to riding again, and is in her habit from morning until evening, when she slips into a lovely tea-gown for an hour or so, to appear resplendent later on in gergeous dinner attire," soruns the letter. The house is full of people, all of the hunting set, of course; so I was not in the least surprised when I was told that the baby's christening was to come off at the next meet and hunt breakfast, which was to take place at The movement started by Mayor Cox | H -- Hall. 'I shall be sure of my godfathers and godmothers if I combine the two," said Milly, 'and I think it will be a good send-off for baby, she added, with all seriousness.

> And so, just before they started, the child was baptized and christened, all the party, except the clergyman and myself, being in habits or boots and breeches. It was really a very pretty sight, however, with the two godfathers in their pink coats, Miss S., as godmother, in the nattiest of habits, with Milly standing by similarly attired, and the little pink shred of humanity in long lace robes. As soon as the ceremony was over, the entire party took horse and scampered away, leaving the small M. F. H. of the future to his nurses."

A RECEPTIVE MIND. The Wonderful Memory of a Noted French

Author.
Theophile Gautier, the French author, was gifted with an extraordinary memory. Whatever he had heard or seen remained engraved upon

On the day on which the two first volumes of Hugo's "Legende des Siecles" were published, the author dined in Gautier's company at the house of another friend. There were several literary men present, all allied more or less closely to the tribe of romanticists, admirers of Victor Hugo, and counting upon finding a feast of good things in his new work.

In the course of the talk Gautier remarked: "Let us prove what we advance. I will recite 'Les Lions' to you. And in a clear voice, his eyes gazing steadfastly as though he were reading from afar a book visible to himself alone, he recited the whole piece, not repeating himself once, never hesitating, and not mistaking a single syl-

Yet he had read it that morning for the first time. Many times his friends, doubtful upon some point of history, language, geography, anatomy or art, referred the matter to him, and received immediate satisfaction. They used to say then: "We have only to turn over the leaves of Theo."

THE INDIGO BIRD.

A Little Songster Who Is Highly Prized in Europe. The indigo bird is about the size of a German canary, and of a deep blue all over, with a metallic luster in certain lights that adds much to his beauty. A graceful little fellow inhabiting a lightly-wooded country, where he pours forth his melody from the top of some high tree to his nesting mate below. His song, says Harper's Young People, though not very powerful, is extremely sweet, and combined with his Mon. F. B. Dawes of Clay Center, Re- rich plumage makes him a desirable eage-bird. Large numbers are shipped to Europe every year, showing that he is appreciated there. He is not hard to tame, and should be fed, as a regular thing, on canary-seed-now and then a little green food; while in his estimation no kinds of insects come amiss. If given the freedom of the room for a flight he is very happy, and will eatch flies in a rapid way. Very graceful con-turb- when flying, the indigo bird will dare. The from one side of the room to the other, stopping instantly, and hovering on the wing for a moment, like the humming-hird. He is inculsitive too and is apt to fly into any dark hole that he finds. The writer once nearly lost his bird by his lighting on a wire feuder to gaze up the dark chimney. A Clever Stratagem.

Once during the Iron Duke's campaign in the Pyrenees, it happened that Gen. Picton's dispositions for receiving the assault of Mershal Soult displeased him. The danger threatened from in front, and the difficulty lay in delaying the attack until Wellington could effect the change he wished. He wan, as usual, equal to the occasion. Waving his hat in the air he galloped to the front of a regiment as if he meant to order a charge. The whole of Picton's line cheered tremendonsly, and as the roar died away Wellington was heard to remark, half Soult is a cautious comto himself: mander and will not attack in force without ascertaining the meaning of these cheers. That will leave time for the Sixth division to come up, and we shall beat him." This was exactly what happened, and Soult sustained a bloody repulse where he might have won an easy victory.
